ISSAQUAH

city and surrounds

Issaquah is a natural blend of natural forestry, beautiful suburbs, local arts, and salmon. This area is riddled with natural wonder and would make even the most outdoorsy enthusiast blush. With easy access across the mountains to the east, and west into Bellevue and Seattle, Issaquah is a great location for local commuters.

Noted for its high livability standards, Issaquah has plenty of amenities, a low crime rate, and a high-emphasis on education and quality of life. This fast-growing town has become a hub for rock climbers, parasailers, and hang gliders.

“Quiet”, “peaceful”, and “beautiful”, Issaquah has become a great place to live for people at every stage of life. Small-town vibes can be felt from many areas of the city, while the highlands provide that suburban feel we’ve all grown accustomed to. Scenic Northwest views and community-orientated neighborhoods provides a safe space for people to lounge and live.

parks & recreation

Like many cities in the Pacific Northwest, Issaquah's natural beauty rings through its parks and recreation opportunities.

In addition to the plethora of local city parks, Issaquah borders Lake Sammamish State Park, Squak Mountain State Park, Cougar Mountain Regional Wildland Park, West Tiger Mountain, and Tiger Mountain State Forest.

Outside of Issaquah's parks and trails system, each of these natural spaces offers countless miles of Pacific Northwest fun!

Looking for a thrill? Paragliders and hang gliders launch from Tiger Mountain in Issaquah!
